

Bricolage. Researching tomorrow's topics

Call for Papers: 11th dgv-Doctoral Student Conference, 08 - 10 September 2016

"Bricolage. Researching tomorrow's topics" – under this heading the 11th dgv-Doctoral Student Conference addresses current PhD projects in cultural anthropology and similar disciplines. PhD students and post-docs, as well as undergraduates planning a PhD project, are hereby invited to present their research projects, give feedback and do networking.

Bricolage: to tinker Claude Lévi-Strauss uses this term in 'The Savage Mind' to describe a strategy of recombination of elements to achieve one's aim.

Likewise, rearrangements are required in the process of writing a PhD thesis. Between research proposal, data collection and writing drafts there are often unforeseen circumstances which force us to reconsider our original plans.

In this sense of 'intellectual crafting' we invite you in 2016 to Augsburg to give new perspectives to our knowledge our ignorance and our challenges.

Overall, the event will become significant thanks to the active participation of all attendants. The key part will be the discussion of the PhD projects, either as part of a panel presentation or as a poster presentation. We are looking forward to contributions in all working stadiums – the only restriction for panel presentations would be a time limit of 30 minutes, including discussion. Apart from that you are free and welcome to choose unusual or experimental manners of presentation and discussion – according to the conference's motto.

Your propositions for presentations and other contributions like poster presentations (max. 500 words, in English or German) as well as a short CV (max. 150 words) can be sent until or use the online form at www.doktagung.de. If you want to participate without any form of presentation, you are welcome to register until 31st July.

June 19th 2016 to call@doktagung.de

For any further questions or suggestions you can always contact the conventions' organization team via servus@doktagung.de.

We look forward to your propositions and contributions!

Your team Augsburg

NB: child care during the convention is possible – let us know early, if you require it.
